Main finding

The intent classifier scores 93.7% on held-out synthetic messages but 72.9% on messages written naturally by a person. The model learned the templates' vocabulary, so unfamiliar phrasing costs accuracy. The system tolerates this because every specialist agent can hand a conversation to the right one, and low-confidence messages go to the general Onboarding Agent instead of being forced into a specialist. The fix for the next version is training on real or more varied messages, not more of the same templates.
